Dear Hiring Manager,

The Property Legal Assistant role at your client's Watford firm appeals to me because it sits directly alongside the disputes and client-facing case management work I have been building toward, and my background in managing property files, preparing court materials and advising clients through complex procedural processes maps closely onto what residential conveyancing support requires.

At BCLP, I spent six months in Real Estate Disputes supporting a caseload that included rights of light, leasehold disputes and landlord and tenant matters. I prepared electronic hearing bundles, assisted with skeleton arguments and maintained matter records on iManage across several files running concurrently. Meeting competing deadlines across those matters required me to keep case files structured and flag issues before they became problems, which is the same discipline conveyancing case management depends on. I also handled court filings and assisted with matter opening and closure, so I am familiar with the administrative spine that keeps a property caseload moving.

My client communication experience comes from two directions. At Citizens Advice East Berkshire, where I currently work as a Legal Adviser, I interview clients on housing, debt, welfare and family matters, take detailed factual statements and translate complex legal requirements into clear guidance for people who are often anxious or unfamiliar with legal processes. The ability to explain what is happening and what comes next matters enormously to clients going through a property transaction, and I have practised exactly that with a vulnerable client base where getting the tone wrong has real consequences. At BCLP I also liaised directly with the client on document requests in the arbitration team, so professional client correspondence in a transactional context is not new to me either.

What draws me to a conveyancing role specifically is the work I did in Real Estate Disputes at BCLP. Researching leasehold and easement issues and understanding how those disputes arose gave me an interest in the transactional side, because it became clear how much turns on the quality of the original conveyancing work. This role is a natural next step from that exposure.

I am based in the area and available immediately. I would welcome the opportunity to discuss the role further.

Yours sincerely,
Maria Silva
