Dear Hiring Manager,

I am applying to join Ryder Reid Legal's document review paralegal pool because my background in evidence review, case file management and working to tight deadlines under pressure makes this a practical and immediate fit.

At BCLP, document review was central to my work across two rotations. In international arbitration, I reviewed and organised evidence for a complex investment arbitration, supporting procedural submissions and the Claimant's memorial. Shortly before a significant filing deadline, I became the only junior supporting the team and took on responsibility for coordinating documents and tracking outstanding actions to ensure on-time submission. In the real estate disputes rotation, I reviewed large volumes of documents across several concurrent matters with competing deadlines, prepared electronic hearing bundles and maintained matter records on iManage. Both rotations required sustained accuracy under pressure and careful handling of confidential material, which is directly relevant to document review project work.

At Citizens Advice, I now manage a caseload of welfare benefits, housing, employment and debt matters from instruction through to submission. I take detailed factual statements, identify evidential issues, prepare document schedules and maintain confidential records, all while meeting external deadlines. The volume and variety of the work has sharpened my ability to switch between matters quickly without losing accuracy or attention to detail on any one file.

Ryder Reid's model suits my position well. I have immediate availability, I am comfortable with the variable hours and short-notice nature of project work, and my experience across BCLP and Citizens Advice means I can work independently without needing close supervision on document review tasks. I am looking to build consistent experience across a range of matters and firms, and a document review role is the right way to do that at this stage.

Yours sincerely,

Maria Silva
