Dear Hiring Manager,

The Commercial Paralegal role at Brandon James's Legal Delivery Centre appeals to me because my background sits squarely in commercial contracts work: at BCLP I reviewed and organised evidence across complex matters, and at Adobe I reviewed and amended software licensing agreements, identified contractual risks, and communicated amendments across legal, sales and international business teams. Working in a centre focused on varied, chargeable commercial matters is a natural next step from that foundation.

At Adobe I spent three months reviewing confidentiality provisions, data-processing clauses and cross-border transfer requirements under UK and EU GDPR, flagging provisions that needed legal input and translating the output into clear guidance for non-legal stakeholders. That work required careful reading of dense contractual language and an understanding of where commercial objectives and legal risk could pull in different directions. At BCLP's Real Estate Disputes team I applied similar attention to document review on a larger scale, managing substantial volumes of confidential documents across several matters simultaneously, preparing electronic hearing bundles and assisting with skeleton arguments and court materials.

At Q-Legal I took a data-privacy matter from client instruction through to a formal written advice letter under a solicitor's supervision, which involved translating complex statutory requirements into commercially focused advice and coordinating with the client and supervising solicitor to meet a fixed deadline. That experience of working independently on a discrete matter while keeping a senior lawyer informed is directly relevant to supporting experienced lawyers in a delivery centre model.

The Legal Delivery Centre structure interests me in itself. The emphasis on working efficiently across varied commercial matters, in close collaboration with client teams, reflects the kind of environment where I have worked most effectively, and the remote working model requires exactly the file discipline and deadline management I built at BCLP, where I tracked procedural deadlines and coordinated outstanding actions across an investment arbitration shortly before a significant submission deadline.

I am available to discuss the role at your convenience.

Yours sincerely,
Maria Silva
