I am applying for the Conveyancing Paralegal role at your Reading firm, advertised through Reed. My background in document-intensive litigation support, client-facing advisory work and careful deadline management makes me well-placed to contribute to a busy conveyancing team from an early stage.

At BCLP's Real Estate Disputes team, I supported the full lifecycle of property-related matters: preparing electronic hearing bundles, conducting legal and factual research on leasehold issues, landlord and tenant disputes, rights of light and easements, drafting client notes, and managing large volumes of documents across competing deadlines. That exposure gave me a grounded understanding of how property transactions and disputes are structured, and the precision required to keep matters on track.

At Citizens Advice, I manage matters independently from instruction through to submission — taking detailed factual statements, identifying evidential and procedural issues, drafting correspondence and maintaining confidential case records. Many of my clients are navigating unfamiliar and high-stakes processes, so translating complex rules into clear, practical guidance is a regular part of my work. I understand that in a busy conveyancing team, the same quality of client communication matters: people need to understand what is happening with their transaction and to feel that their matter is being handled carefully.

I am detail-oriented by habit and by necessity. At BCLP, I became the sole junior supporting an arbitration team shortly before a major deadline and helped ensure on-time submission of the Claimant's memorial. A partner and associate noted that my performance was comparable to a newly qualified solicitor. I bring the same approach to every matter — structured, deadline-conscious and accurate.

This role appeals specifically because of the firm's reputation in residential property and the hands-on exposure to the full conveyancing process it offers. I am looking to build specialist depth in this area, and I would welcome the opportunity to do that within a supportive and well-regarded team.

I would be glad to discuss my application further at your convenience.
