Dear Hiring Manager,

The paralegal role at Bank of London appeals to me because my background combines regulatory and compliance-focused legal work with hands-on experience in document review, drafting, and managing matters under pressure, which maps directly onto what a fast-moving fintech bank is likely to need from a paralegal.

At BCLP I spent six months in international arbitration, where I became the sole junior supporting a team shortly before a major submission deadline. I tracked outstanding documents, coordinated with an external translator, and helped ensure the memorial was filed on time. That experience gave me a practical grounding in deadline management and working across complex, document-heavy matters that I have continued to use at Citizens Advice, where I now manage a caseload that spans welfare, housing, employment and debt, from client intake through to submission. Both roles have required me to handle confidential records carefully, identify issues quickly, and communicate clearly with people who need straightforward guidance rather than legal jargon.

The compliance angle is where my background connects most directly to Bank of London's context. At Adobe I reviewed and amended software licensing agreements, assessed data-processing provisions against UK and EU GDPR requirements, and liaised between legal, sales and international business teams to resolve contractual queries. At Q-Legal I then managed a data-privacy matter independently for a data-driven start-up, researching Data Protection Act 2018 obligations and producing a formal written advice letter under a solicitor's supervision. Working through those matters gave me a clearer understanding of how regulatory requirements operate in a commercial, technology-facing environment, which is directly relevant to a bank operating in the fintech space where compliance with financial regulation and data obligations runs through the core of the business.

What draws me to Bank of London specifically is the combination of a regulated financial services environment and a technology-first operating model. That intersection creates legal and compliance work that is genuinely substantive, and I want to develop in an environment where I can build expertise in financial services regulation rather than moving across practice areas without focus. This role is a logical next step from the regulatory and commercial exposure I already have.

Yours sincerely,
Maria Silva
