Dear Hiring Manager,

I am applying for the Residential Property Paralegal role at your Reading firm because my practical background in real estate disputes and document-heavy case management gives me a foundation I can build on in residential conveyancing, and the firm's reputation for taking on candidates at different levels of experience makes this a realistic next step.

At BCLP I spent six months in the Real Estate Disputes team, where I prepared electronic hearing bundles, reviewed documents across multiple live matters and assisted with court filings and deadline tracking. A lot of that work required accuracy under pressure: documents had to be correctly organised, filings had to go in on time, and matter records had to be kept current in iManage across several competing files. The discipline of managing that volume of material carefully is directly relevant to keeping conveyancing transactions moving through their stages without things being missed.

At Citizens Advice I manage matters from the initial client interview through to submission, which means taking a complete factual history, identifying what documents are needed, drafting correspondence and maintaining confidential records throughout. Translating complex procedural requirements into plain guidance for clients who are often anxious about their situation is a consistent part of that role. The client-facing side of a residential property transaction works in much the same way: clients need to understand what is happening and what they need to do at each stage, and getting that communication right matters as much as the paperwork behind it.

I am conscious that I have not worked in a conveyancing practice before, but I have spent time working through the transactional side of property finance through the Clifford Chance Real Estate Finance programme, which gave me a working understanding of how financing and security interact in property transactions. That sits alongside the disputes exposure at BCLP, so I arrive with more context than a purely academic background would give.

This firm's approach of exposing paralegals to the full range of a transaction, from client onboarding through to registration, is exactly the kind of structured, end-to-end learning I am looking for at this stage.

Yours sincerely,
Maria Silva
