Dear Hiring Manager,

The European Patent Paralegal role at Talentmark's pharmaceutical client in Bracknell is not my usual area of practice, but the core of the work, reviewing incoming documentation, maintaining organised records and tracking procedural deadlines within a regulated, high-stakes environment, maps directly onto what I have been doing across my placements and current role.

At BCLP I spent six months embedded in an international arbitration team, becoming the only junior supporting the team shortly before a major submission deadline. I coordinated documents, tracked outstanding actions across a complex matter and helped ensure on-time filing. Working with large volumes of procedural material under real deadline pressure taught me how to maintain accuracy when the pace picks up. That same discipline carried into my current role at Citizens Advice, where I manage matters from instruction through to submission independently: taking detailed factual statements, identifying evidential gaps, preparing document schedules and maintaining confidential case records across a caseload of welfare, employment and housing matters simultaneously.

I do not have a background in patent law specifically, but I have handled document review and procedural tracking in both litigation and advisory contexts, and I understand how much turns on getting the administrative infrastructure right in regulated proceedings. The pharmaceutical context adds a layer I find genuinely interesting. My LLM dissertation examined data protection development across jurisdictions, which meant spending time with regulatory frameworks and understanding how compliance obligations interact with commercial operations. The European Patent Office's procedural regime is a different body of rules, but the discipline of reading regulatory requirements carefully and translating them into accurate, well-organised case management is one I have practised in several contexts.

The Bracknell location is straightforward for me to reach from Maidenhead, and the hybrid model fits how I currently work. I would welcome the chance to discuss how my experience handling procedural documentation and deadline management could contribute to the team.

Yours sincerely,
Maria Silva
