Dear Hiring Manager,

I am applying for the Junior Legal PA role at Larbey Evans because it offers direct exposure to a busy legal environment, and my background supporting fee earners at BCLP and managing client-facing matters at Citizens Advice gives me a practical foundation to contribute from day one.

At BCLP, where I spent a year as a placement student across international arbitration and real estate disputes, a large part of my day-to-day work was exactly the kind of support a legal PA provides. I maintained structured electronic case files in iManage, tracked procedural deadlines across several concurrent matters, coordinated document schedules, and liaised with the client and external translators to keep a significant arbitration submission on track. When I became the only junior supporting that team shortly before a major deadline, I had to prioritise quickly and communicate clearly with the fee earners about what was outstanding. The submission was delivered on time, and the feedback I received from the partner and associate was that my work was comparable to that of a newly qualified solicitor.

At Citizens Advice, I manage matters from first interview through to submission: taking detailed factual statements, drafting correspondence, preparing document schedules and maintaining confidential case records. Working with vulnerable clients on sensitive issues has also given me a clear sense of how important tone and accuracy are in client-facing written communication, which transfers directly to drafting correspondence on behalf of fee earners in a legal PA role.

What draws me to this particular role is that it sits inside a law firm rather than a purely administrative environment. I want to continue developing within a legal context, and this position offers the chance to do that while applying organisational and communication skills I have already built in practice. Larbey Evans' focus on placing candidates in roles where they can grow over time also matters to me: I am looking for a firm where doing the role well leads somewhere, not simply a position to fill.

I am available at short notice and happy to discuss the role at your convenience.

Yours sincerely,
Maria Silva
