Dear Hiring Manager,

I am applying for the Junior Legal Cashier role at the firm you represent because my background in legal practice support gives me a grounded understanding of the financial administration that underpins fee-earner work, and I want to build specialist expertise in legal cashiering as my next step.

At BCLP, I worked directly alongside finance and administration functions as part of a one-year placement. I used iManage to maintain matter records, supported matter opening and closure processes, and assisted with cost comparisons across several active files. Handling these tasks in a firm environment gave me a clear view of how cashiering and accounts work sits at the centre of a practice, keeping matters moving and ensuring compliance with the rules that govern how client and office money is handled. That exposure made legal finance something I wanted to understand more deeply, not just work alongside.

At Citizens Advice, I currently manage matters end to end, which means tracking deadlines, preparing and maintaining case records, and handling documentation accurately across a volume of concurrent files. The organisation that requires is directly relevant to routine cashiering tasks, where errors in account allocation or timing have regulatory consequences. I am comfortable working carefully and systematically under pressure, and I understand why precision matters in a legal accounts context.

The firm's breadth across employment, dispute resolution, real estate and intellectual property appeals to me because my practical experience touches several of those areas. Working within a smaller, growing firm also means the role is likely to involve real responsibility from an early stage, which suits how I learn best.

I am committed to developing genuine competence in legal cashiering and would welcome the chance to do that in a firm where the function is taken seriously.

Yours sincerely,
Maria Silva
