Dear Hiring Manager,

I am applying for the Residential Property Paralegal role at QED Legal because my background in managing case files, meeting deadlines under pressure and communicating with clients on procedural matters maps directly onto the day-to-day demands of a conveyancing team, even though my practical experience has been primarily in disputes and advice work rather than residential property itself.

At BCLP, I spent six months supporting Real Estate Disputes matters alongside the international arbitration team. I prepared electronic hearing bundles, assisted with skeleton arguments and court filings, maintained matter records on iManage, and managed documents across several active matters with competing deadlines. The work required consistent accuracy and careful file organisation, and I tracked procedural and hearing deadlines across multiple matters simultaneously. That experience gave me a clear sense of how real estate legal work is structured and where errors in document management or deadline tracking can cause serious problems.

At Citizens Advice, I now manage welfare, housing and debt matters from initial interview through to submission. I take detailed factual statements, prepare document schedules, draft correspondence, and keep confidential case records up to date, all while advising clients who often find procedural requirements confusing or stressful. Translating complex rules into practical guidance for vulnerable people, and doing so within tight timeframes, has sharpened both my client communication and my case management habits.

Residential conveyancing appeals to me because it combines the structured file management and deadline discipline I developed at BCLP with the direct client contact and procedural complexity I deal with at Citizens Advice. Property transactions have real consequences for clients, and I find that kind of responsibility clarifying rather than daunting. The Reading location also suits me practically, as I am already based in the area and currently working in Maidenhead.

I am aware this role calls for existing conveyancing experience that I do not yet have. What I can offer is a strong foundation in file management, document handling and client communication within a legal setting, and a genuine intention to build conveyancing as a long-term specialism.

Yours sincerely,
Maria Silva
